From the Nashville Dispatch, Jan. 17.
Capture and burning of the W. H. Sidell, the Trio and Parthenia.

At length we have undoubted authority for believing that the gunboat W. H. Sidell, the Trio, and Parthenia, have been captured and destroyed by the Confederates in the neighborhood of Harpeth Shoals. It appears from all we can learn, that the Sidell left Ashland, Tenn., on Wednesday, the 14th inst., bound for the head of Harpeth Shoals; and that when she arrived at the Shoals, she found the Trio and the Parthenia at a landing. The Sidell was then hailed from the shore, to which she was ordered to come. She refused, and a shot fired at the solitary individual in sight. In an instant thereafter a volley of musketry was poured into the Sidell, and at the same time a cannon was brought to bear upon her. At this point Captain Van Dorn went on deck and waved a white handkerchief; the firing ceased, and the boat was surrendered to the Confederate commander.

The work of destruction was now commenced; the guns were spiked, and the torch applied to the boats. The flames spread rapidly, and in a moment or two the scene was one of awful grandeur, the flames illuminating the country around, and the ammunition causing peals, loud and frequent, to reverberate through the country around about, until in a very brief time darkness again reigned over the scene, and all was still as death.

While this was going on, the prisoners taken from the boats, were paroled, all except Captain Van Dorn, who was retained. The paroled prisoners were permitted to make the best of their way home, while Capt. Van Dorn and all the negroes found on board three boats were carried off South.

We have also learned on good authority that the Hastings, with about 150 bales of cotton, has been destroyed. There seems to be no doubt that the Hastings or some other boat besides those named above has been burned, but we must wait the developments of time for the facts. We may add, that the owners of the cotton above referred to yesterday offered to sell their interest in it at 6 cents a pound.

From the Rebel Banner, Jan. 22.]

Gen. Wharten advised us yesterday that all was quiet in front of his carefully guarded lines. We hear the same report from other points in advance of us. The Federals are resting quietly and doing their best to recuperate their shattered ranks. They continue in somewhat gloomy straits for the lack of subsistence. Up to the time of the battle of Murfreesboro they had the Nashville and Chattanooga railroad running fifteen miles out, but since then Wheeler and Dick McCann have seriously retarded their operations by destroying a locomotive and construction train and a bridge a few miles this side of Nashville. The heavy rains of last week also destroyed the railroad bridge across Stone's river, near Murfreesboro, which our forces left standing.

The Abolitionists at Nashville are also suffering from the recent interruption of River navigation at Harpeth Shoals. They have discovered by this time that, though there may be a flood tide in the Cumberland, Wheeler and Forrest have a way of obstructing rivers before which both gunboats and steamers must succumb.

We have also positive information that what Gen. John H. Morgan left of the Louisville and Nashville railroad in the way of bridges and embankments has been destroyed by the recent heavy rains. This is confirmed by the following which we find in the Nashville Dispatch of the 17th inst:

"It is reported that the bridge on the Louisville and Nashville railroad at Pilot Knob and another North of Gallatin, were injured by the late rains and high waters. These injuries have interfered with the running of the trains. We understand that the bridge across Mill Creek, on the Nashville and Chattanooga railroad, has been washed away by the high water. It is also reported that the bridge over Stone's river has been washed away."

THE YANKEE ARMY.—We published a few days since, says the Petersburg Express, the official statement of the Yankee army, numbering in all 1,096,000 officers and men. But the Yankee papers figure this away to less than 500,000 in actual service. They say that 500,000 are sick, 180,000 are stragglers and deserters, and that few will be disposed to place the dead and wounded at less than from 100,000 to 300,000, and many at considerably over these figures. Say 300,000, and these items sum up 630,000, and leave the number now in service only 466,000 out of 1,096,000, who have been mustered from time to time. Another year, should the war last so long, will see up the remnant of all the Yankee grand armies. And they confess that they cannot raise another.

The Nashville correspondent of the Charleston Courier writes:

You don't know the thirst here for Southern papers. All editors should give all they can and send them by all opportunities, especially the journals of Richmond, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, Jackson and Vicksburg.

The Gunboat Capture.

We had the pleasure yesterday of meeting Mr. H. C. Cunningham, of Grayson county, Ky., who, after various delays crossed the Cumberland river at Harpeth Shoals the night previous to the attack made by General Wheeler on the enemy's fleet of gunboats and transports. He participated in the adventure which he describes as one of a very thrilling and exciting nature. The gunboat Sidell was surrendered by Capt. Van Dorn after the first fire, he appearing on the hurricane roof and waving a white handkerchief very frantically. His conduct, however, partook somewhat of the courageous, as he flaunted his flag of submission under a shower of bullets, and just at that time the ball of a rifle canister whizzed in close proximity to his body.

A large amount of booty was obtained by our cavalry on the steamers and they regaled themselves with "cigars and cognac" at the expense of Uncle Sam. The same day a party of Forrest's forces was dispatched across the Cumberland to the little town of Ashland where they destroyed a large quantity of Federal supplies.

A Federal force of cavalry was sent out from Rosecrans' army to intercept Wheeler and Forrest, but they did not approach in bailing distance. Had not the Harpeth river been beyond the possibility of fording the whole number would have been captured. As it was they only learned how near they were to the Confederates and then ingloriously fled. Several of the party were sent to death as severe was the cold, and so unused were the Federal cavalrymen to these out of doors excursions.—Rebel Banner, Jan. 22nd.

We have nothing additional from Newbern or the coast. We cannot hear of any further advance of the Abolition forces, and must suppose that such movement has been deferred for a time or that their preparations are incomplete. They may have smuggled off forces by water, or their apparent advance by land last week may have been a feint to cover other movements.

The state of things in the mountainous region of this State bordering on East Tennessee is becoming quite alarming. To the progress of demoralization and insubordination among the fastnesses of the mountains and near the State line, the Knoxville Register has repeatedly called attention. In these fastnesses deserters from both armies, refugees from Southern conscription or Northern drafting, desperadoes, counterfeits, etc., finding hiding places and security, and from there issue forth to plunder, annoy and not unfrequently murder the loyal citizens.—Wilkinson Journal, Jan. 20.

Artimus Ward, who has penetrated the councils at Washington, asserts that:

At one of the circles recently held at the White House in Washington, the question was asked if the spirit of Andrew Jackson was present. The reply was, "No, not much." It was then asked, "Has the spirit of Jackson been here recently?" to which the reply was given that the spirit of Jackson had not been within a hundred miles of Washington for a good many years.

Lieut. Gen. Leonidas Polk, who participated in the great battle at Murfreesboro, is now in town, on a visit to his family. He speaks in glowing terms of the gallantry of the three North Carolina regiments in that bloody engagement, viz: the 29th, Col. Vance; the 39th, Col. Coleman, and the 60th, Col. McDowell. He says they fought like veterans. Asheville (N. C.) News, 15th inst.

The Richmond Enquirer calls for an increase in our cavalry arm. It wants 20,000 cavalry attached to each of our great armies, and announces that a camp of instruction for cavalry is about to be established.

The Charleston Courier suggests that some of the women who recently came to Virginia from the North by flag of truce, may be spies. Many of them are Northern women who have never before been South.

The Aneiger des Westons, the organ of the German population of St. Louis, has abandoned the Republican party and taken sides with the peace Democracy.

A Northern paper says that a Yankee captain has had his commission taken from him for unmercifully beating a negro.

This is in accordance with the Shakespearean "Off with his head—so much for bucking Ham."

Sweet oranges were sold in Savannah on Saturday last at 25 cents per hundred.

Gen. Cleburne.

The Middle Tennessee war correspondent of the Mobile Register, gives the following biographical sketch of this distinguished officer:

As Major General Cleburne is frequently confounded with the Tennessee Cleburnes, and as he bore a conspicuous part in the battle of Murfreesboro—which I shall on another occasion endeavor to give you your readers the following interesting sketch:

Patrick R. Cleburne was born near Queenstown, Ireland, on the 17th of March, 1828, and is, consequently, hardly thirty five years of age. He is about five feet ten inches in height, well made, light complexion, a fine piercing grey eye, with a large pupil, wears a mustache and goatee, is quite prepossessing, is remarkably quiet and modest. His father was a prominent physician, but he unfortunately lost both of his parents when he was fourteen years of age. He was afterwards sent to learn the profession of an apothecary, but not fancying the business, he, at the age of nineteen, ran off and enlisted in the British 1st Infantry, known as the "Prince of Wales' Own," then just returned from India, and bearing on its colors the names of many battles of the Old and the New World; among the number, "Queenstown," "Nagasaki," "Detroit," "Candahar," "Ghuznee," and "Canton." After three years service, young Cleburne purchased his discharge, and with two brothers—one of whom is one of Gen. John H. Morgan's men—emigrated to America. He settled in Helena, Arkansas, and studied law with the Hon. T. B. Hanly, Chief Justice of that State, and was successfully engaged in the practice of his profession when the war broke out.

With Generals Hindman, Lucius Polk and others, he joined the ranks as a private, but was soon elected captain of the company, and assisted in securing the Little Rock Arsenal, before the fall of Fort Sumter. The volunteer companies of the State being ordered to rendezvous at Mound City, opposite Memphis, Cleburne was elected colonel of the first regiment raised in Arkansas. Thomas H. Bradley was made Brigadier General by the State Convention and placed over him. Bradley caused the retreat of the Arkansas troops from Bearfield's Point in the Mississippi, and was believed to be in Helena, Arkansas, Cleburne suspecting him finally deposed him, and he was afterwards brought before a court martial at Mound City on a charge of mutiny. Bradley, however, agreed to leave the matter to the decision of Gen. Pillow, who decided that Bradley should not resume the command of the forces under Cleburne, which were then transferred to the Confederate States' service, and placed under Gen. Hardee in Southeastern Missouri.

On the 13th of December last, he was appointed a Major-General, and placed in command of one of the divisions of Hardee's corps. On the 31st he commanded this division in the battle of Murfreesboro, and on the night of that terrible day of slaughter his brigade was intact. He commanded on the extreme left, and with McCown's and a part of Cheatham's divisions, had foreseen driven the enemy over five miles, capturing many cannon and small arms.

Such is the history of the remarkable advance of a soldier from the ranks to a Major-General, solely by his own merit, without the aid or influence of political friends. It is a brilliant example to the young soldiers of our Confederacy, and forms an interesting portion of the history of our revolution.

Tribute of Respect.

The following tribute of respect was adopted at a meeting of the officers of the 16th and 25th Louisiana Vols., in memory of the late Col. R. W. Fick, who fell meritoriously while gallantly leading that regiment in a charge upon an eight gun battery of the enemy, on the bloody field near Murfreesboro, Dec. 31st, 1862.

Whereas, Death has removed from the head of our regiment a gallant soldier and accomplished gentleman, in the person of our lamented commander, Col. Stuart Wilkins Fick.

Be it Resolved, That the regiment has by his death lost a Colonel beloved by officers and men, the service an accomplished soldier, and the Confederacy a useful citizen, who knew no sacrifice too great for her sake, and whose devotion was fully crowned by his glorious death; as an associate a genial and warm hearted friend, as an officer a conscientious and just man, as a citizen the parent of patriots. Col. R. W. Fick has left no act to dim the brilliancy of a life consecrated by earnest devotion to the welfare of his country.

Resolved, That we sympathize deeply and tenderly with the afflictions of his mourning relatives, and tender the heartfelt condolence of his associates in arms to the family of this martyr, struck down with his face to the foe manfully maintaining amid the fury of battle the cause of Southern Independence.

Resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolutions be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and that they be published in the Mobile Register, Vicksburg Whig, Richmond Examiner and Chattanooga Rebel.

MASONIC FEMALE INSTITUTE, CLEVELAND, TENN.

Rev. J. N. Bradshaw, Principal.

THE next Session of this Institute will commence on the FIRST MONDAY of January 1863, under the direction and professorship of the Rev. Mr. Bradshaw, who has had charge of it for the last 25 months.

The Trustees in making this announcement would most especially appeal to all citizens who have daughters to educate, to send them to this institution. Mr. Bradshaw has had charge of the school for the last 15 months, during which time he has rendered single and, we might say, universal satisfaction to the Trustees, patrons and pupils. There never was a better time for men to educate their daughters than now—money is plenty—everything a father raises bears two prices, and the tuition to this School is the same that it was when everything was at low figures. What excuse can there be now for a man who neglects to educate his daughter? None. Because here, in Cleveland and healthy locality, we have an Institute, with an excellent instructor, aided by a sufficient corps of Assistants, to instruct all who may favor it with their patronage. Let one and all put their shoulder to the wheel and build up such a School as will be of incalculable benefit to us and an honor to our town. We have the building and we have the Teachers—the balance devolves upon the people. We hope they may nobly perform their duty.

The Trustees are thankful to the citizens for the patronage bestowed upon Mr. Bradshaw heretofore, and are glad to know that under his administration the Institution has not lost any of the enviable reputation it sustained in "the better days of the Republic."
